Awards:
The Georgia Association of Physician Assistants (GAPA) will honor two of our faculty on Tuesday, July 16, 2013, at its 2013 Summer CME Conference at Hilton Head, SC: Terry Mize, PA-C, and Joanne Williams-Cooper, MD, will receive GAPA’s Physician/PA Partnership Award for 2013.

In addition, Terry Mize, PA-C, is one of five Physician Assistants chosen to receive GAPA’s Distinguished Service Award for 2013.

Those of us in Emory University School of Medicine’s Department of Family and Preventive Medicine are all well aware of the dedication to teaching and to patient care that both Terry Mize and Joanne Williams have exhibited throughout their careers. For many years, they both have been active participants and leaders in our annual Migrant Farm Workers Health Project in South Georgia. They have been active in numerous civic, community, and church efforts. They have been devoted participants and leaders on committees on the regional and national level, as well as within the Emory community. In addition to all this, they have also found time to be authors and editors and share their accumulated knowledge in a variety of publications. They both have received numerous awards for their service, awards on the institutional level, the regional level, and the national level.

We can all take great pride that Terry Mize and Joanne Williams have brought these latest honors not only to themselves, but also to the Emory University School of Medicine and to our Department of Family and Preventive Medicine!

Community Service Learning Project:
The 2013 South Georgia Farmworker Health Project is underway. The caravan of students, residents, faculty, interpreters, volunteers and the teen corps took off today, June 7th and will hopefully arrive in Bainbridge without any severe weather events as a result of the tropical storm, Andrea. They will return to Atlanta, June 21st.
